

ALEXANDRU RAFILA

Professor Alexandru Rafila is currently the Chief of Microbiology Department in National Institute for Infectious Diseases Matei Bals” in Bucharest, Romania. He received his medical degree in 1987 and attained a Ph.D in 2004 in Microbiology. He has been a senior specialist in Microbiology and Public Health.

Dr. Rafila is the President of the Romanian Society of Microbiology and has served as Secretary of State, General Director for Public Health and several times as Personal Adviser in Ministry of Health. He is a previous Director of the Public Health Institute Bucharest.

In addition to his standing in his own country, Dr. Rafila’s expertise is recognized internationally. He acts as an expert for WHO and NATO in the field of Public Health and has represented Romania in the Management Board of ECDC and in the Standing Committee of WHO Europe.

An active organizer and participant in many medical conferences and events, Dr. Rafila has authored microbiology manuals, book chapters and guidelines for public health and laboratory medicine. He also publishes primary research in national and international scientific journals.